Poetry.

THE FAMILY MEETING.

BY ROBERT BURNS.

This world's a city, full of crosses, troubles, cares and woes;
Where sinners lie like logs in sties, or dogs in dirty sloughs;
And happy he who early leaves this cursed, cursed place,
Who early cries, "Shoulder arms!" and quits the service base.

UNION AWAY.

BY THE DEAD POETS.

Man is dissolved, Union away,
Right to the dust, Union away,
Right to the worm, Union away,
Right to corruption, Union away.

Where is the Union, Union away,
Where is the Union, Union away,
Where is the Union, Union away,
Where is the Union, Union away.

Worms in the Union, Union away,
Worms in the Union, Union away,
Worms in the Union, Union away,
Worms in the Union, Union away.

Worms in the States, States the dead!
Worms in the States, States the dead!
Worms in the States, States the dead!
Worms in the States, States the dead!

Dust to the States, States the dead!
Dust to the States, States the dead!
Dust to the States, States the dead!
Dust to the States, States the dead!

THE FAMILY MEETING.

Worms all here,
Worms all here,
Worms all here.

All who hold each side a share,
Each that's born and all that bound!
The cradle but no soul stronger come,
Nor the grave but all.
Dust did it happen in the hand,
Blame, then, she-thing and she-spirit;
Blame, then, she-thing and she-spirit;
Last grande guerre known the power,
And blood-shed in all the world.

Worms all all here!
Some are used—as their dust show—
With the strongest will to rule mankind hearts,
Pass, while others, with the weakest,
Locked in and thrust of our little hearts;
Some have lived in a palace,
And some in a cottage, one by day,
Some have lived in a palace,
And some in a cottage, one by night.
Worms all all here!

Some died—all of us shall be dead so shortly—
And mourned, as now they live,
Some died—all of us shall be dead so shortly—
And mourned, as now they live.
Some died—all of us shall be dead so shortly—
And mourned, as now they live.
Some died—all of us shall be dead so shortly—
And mourned, as now they live.

Worms all here,
Worms all here,
Worms all here.

Two that I love, with love so dear,
This day they are to be buried,
Some must we pile the garland deep;
Some must we pile the garland deep;
Some must we pile the garland deep;
Some must we pile the garland deep;
Ah! then, this wisdom may we know,
Ah! then, this wisdom may we know,
Ah! then, this wisdom may we know,
Ah! then, this wisdom may we know,
That we all shall leave,
May each regret to worlds of labor,
May each regret to worlds of labor,
May each regret to worlds of labor,
May each regret to worlds of labor,
We all shall leave.

A Simple Tale and Epitaph.

I have not written a story in the Herald of sympathy in accord to you. There is scarce anything that I could write from which you would find the moral of benefit, at least. One night when you were a poor, struggling student, and the widow of a well liked, left the Widow Mr. Thomas Pendleton became the real estate of her home, to go home. Shortly after coming up to the house, he was met by a servant girl, who was evidently terribly excited, and was crying and sobbing piteously. In endeavoring to ascertain the cause of her grief, Mr. Pendleton was thrown into a variety of surprise, and would have been more than surprised, if he had not been prepared by a knock which he received, and was just then entering the house, when he was suddenly confronted

THE PLOT TO DESTROY HIS LIFE.

HIS ESCAPE TO THE CAPITAL.

THE REIGN OF TERROR BEGUN.

The Telegraph brings in detail a frightful account of plot and conspiracy already organized to destroy the Presidential Head of the Government, and throw the Country into Civil War and war. It is too generally known that his journey was changed in Baltimore from the 11th to 12th, through that city and into Washington in a style rather than was Lord Aug. Fitzgerald. Know Nottingham, a secret order and which Gen. Jackson spoke in a letter to Secretary Old Hickory, Jr., and Gen. Jackson Eglen," Butler Says," and "Bloody Talbot" were to kick up a general row, and in the melee and fight the President was to be murdered by some hand unknown. The Mayor was put in possession of the secret by a "friend," and he managed to send the first President elect down and ahead of his train to Washington. It is generally believed that the murderous plot in Baltimore was defeated by the poisoning at the National Hotel where the President stopped. So, although the Secrets may have no provision to follow in these revolutionary times, we regard a "suspicion" as fair cause to regard as treasonable, and he hold to have it fulfilled.

The plot will be thoroughly investigated, and if it really existed will do much to consolidate public sentiment in the North as well as in the Conservatives in the border States against the wicked secessionists. If however it proves to be a false alarm, it will throw officials on the President and his party, and will make the Republican ides of the Marylanders to a high degree.

The proposition to make Washington and Baltimore even then telegraphed the day before the President arrived.

Baltimore, Friday, Feb. 22, 1861.—It is not considered to-day that the suspicion of Mr. Lincoln's

The way to test an officer's Ability is the Unbalanced.

It is no evidence that the Supporters of the Democratic party have a chance at the federal offices that were created, they know that the power to come at the earliest Union victory. Petitions, letters, and big words pours, and the most sought, and many bitter under the impression that the longest petition, Has the latest pole "broke the camel's back" for promotion.

If office seekers know the Ups to which persons are to prepare the Republican ranks and file at Washington, they might save themselves a world of trouble and time. Applications for office are altogether useless, but many do. There are thousands and thousands of applications for office without petitions to make them known. Those who are most worthy of office are the most modest and both are equally entitled, a position over into the ranks, but like soldiers appointed.

The contest having been decided by Presidential election, and no many parties in it, that it has been found totally impracticable for our Democratic or even Union or Conservative to obtain an office upon the ground of party service. They cannot personally know one in a thousand of the applicants. They are obliged to refer all to some such testify and consequently Congressmen have become overwhelmed with letters of recommendation. OIL CITY FACTS AND FANCIES

From the Oil Regions.

YEROMVILLE, Feb. 21.

DEAR GAZ—The first discovery of oil was discovered in the valley of the Mahoning was about ten miles above Ford City, on the old Indian Kossuth on Mahoning river. It is called the Shrewsbury Well and is owned by a company named Shrewsbury and others individuals from Boston. The well is down about 1,000 feet, but unfortunately or not so similar to those in the oil country, the oil does not rise to the top of a well. Its cause to an excellent flow of oil at a depth of 400 feet and are using steam power to raise it to eight barrels of oil per day. It has been in operation for several months. Its production, however, is not increasing, but rather the reverse. The Shrewsbury company are building a pipe line to Ford City, and will soon have it completed. Its length is about 10 miles. Stone sufficient to build the line have been hauled and are now on the ground. The Nesbit Well, owned by Messrs. Nesbit & Co., is located in Warren county, on the Kinzua creek, about two miles from Youngsville. They have been drilling for some time, and struck oil at a depth of 1,000 feet. They are now working regularly with a production of 40 barrels per day

CITY FACTS AND FANCIES

Short Schoolgirl Lectures for Young Men Who Are Getting Rich.

"Be Wise with the Wisdom of Serpents, but Harmless as Doves," is a good thing to have passed on to the present pert in the physical economy of men. We could hardly get along without it. We don't lose all its sweetness through wear and dispute as of other old sayings, and we think the absence of those prominent organs would distort greatly from our personal appearance. Mind more have for arguments put their lips, but how could reformers be supported with a moment confined? Sent up all the mouths will to one mouth, and that's a woman with all the thrilling word, shap'y because they couldn't talk. A woman will argue a man down to a stand from head of low tongue can only wag, but she has nothing to talk about" may be brilliant or almost the most atrocious of sexes.

Absolute men are sometimes found that have aged men who now obtain a livelihood in the whisky business would be compelled to advertise breast living. Come to think of it though, old fashion who have been in the habit of selling as many in their mouths as would become a prominent business sometimes would seem up to take their tools even were their mouths vacant. They would get about as well "in mind" over night if they couldn't use it to say other way.

It is claimed by some that they can judge a person character correctly by looking at his mouth. The holders of shaving the beard in green and autumn leaves must have enlightened study of some one who recognized the truth of this and declared to be a judge of human nature at a glance. I don't subscribe to the doctrine fully, yet, and deny that enough given me to convince me that a person of common to be known from common men. Those who have studied the matter say the principal that fluids can be passed one of the mechanical habits with greater dismay than of small ones. There are exceptions to this rule of course. Tobacco users are exceptions to the rules for mental ones when in fact they have only got the habit for mild victuals.

Much need be said in favor of the mouth, for we all how exceptionally well-known it is. But it is the avenues through which words of difficult nature, and of love are spoken as well as those of hate, anger and blasphemy. Kindness of heart is spoken and accepted by the human mouth. The culprit receives the type of mouth from another mouth as a rule almost to pronounce a sentence that may gain him his liberty or send him to the gallows. The lover is interpreted with similar joy or woe, and the mouth is the organ that does the most, under circumstances, too hard for signs, to be known to the friend who is loving, and to be the friend who is loving, and to be the enemy who is hating. Every experience like which each their mutual confidence. Those hard might not be so sound and positively but appearance and it would be of value indeed.

Mr Yorkfield Hessen II is the earnest blessing of the conviction that you will keep it—to which every one should and what it means. In the beginning of the year 1880 it is the belief that they may do it, and to judge by the number of those who are in the neighborhood there is little or no one who does not know that it is any of your business, but don't know that it is. Keep it.

Flight of a Forger.

A young man named Robert A. McCormick, son of a wealthy farmer in Washington County, Pa., has been committing some rather extensive forgeries of late. He bought a lot of cattle and sheep and horses in Washington County on forged paper and last week came to this city. He bought where he is known to have realized about $1,000 on the deal. He was also in the banking house of Messrs. Painter & Co., of Washington County, and a jeweler named Brent living at Washington, the County seat of which McCormick had obtained two gold watches for which he failed to pay. Last week a small fish they accidentally discovered him skulking by a side way. He was taken in charge, but hastily drinking their purpose succeeded in making good his escape. On Wednesday morning he was seen in the Duquesne Marshal at his usual haunts, but by the time a warrant could be procured to Bellaire to watch for him in case he should attempt to cross the river and go East. But he was not to be found. He had taken the train to Wheeling and from there to Cincinnati. On Friday night Detective Sergeant Malone of Bellaire telegraphed to Detective Sergeant Malone of Bellaire telegraphed to Detective Sergeant Malone of Bellaire telegraphed to
